Short Description:	A mental health professional explains why speaking to children about the coronavirus crisis can help them better cope with all the changes happening around them.
Long Description:	While parents and caregivers may want to shield children from the harsh reality of what the Coronavirus crisis is doing around the world, not talking to them about what's behind some of the major changes happening all around them can be very frightening for kids. A mental health professional explains how to include them in the conversation and reassure them that although things are different and may be for a while you are taking steps to keep them safe.
